Meet Bill Torgie, the Beaverbrook of the high-school world.
He rose to success on youth, hard work and lack of experience

By LEX SCHRAG

AT AGE 21 William Henry Torgie is often asked to tell groups of high-school students how to be a success in business. In spite of his youth William Henry can tell them.

William Henry Torgie.
He knows more than 25

High News with a circulation of about 25,000. High News is a weekly for high-school students. It has three editions—Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal—and runs to 20 pages or more. It goes to 44 schools in the Toronto urban district, to 75 Ontario schools outside Toronto and to 10 in Montreal. The paper has just appointed a full-time Vancouver representative and intended, it is expected, to make it the national high-school publication.

The paper, quoting William Henry, is "for youth, by youth and for youth." Price is two cents. One cent for High News, one cent for the school handling charges.

Advice in the Pappy Letters

THREE AGES, of course, feature, "Opinion Column," an advice column by Mary Lou Zilberberg, Toronto, Ontario, College graduate, columnist Dorothy De with High News address, Pappalotto, Alton (Pappalotto) writes:

"Dear Mary Lou: I have a question which I would like to hear your opinion of (this, including a question with a question):

"I am a Toronto and attend a Toronto college. I have a lot of time, with long, long, long hours and a figure that has been around to Rocky Grolla's. In school I am very popular with all the girls, participate in every sport and am an excellent athlete in every school sport. But, Mary Lou—no one ever asks me out! It isn't anything so simple as that, as I would like to be an athlete and a leader."

"To which Miss Zilberberg replied: "Honestly, I'm afraid your personality is really deficient. What you make up for in looks, you lack in interest. Success brings me very self-centered, but the ones who are popular keep their self-interest in the background and devote all their efforts to making other people feel important—" and youth more of same.

There is a volume of college letters quoted by a sports letter in "Puppy." There is an editorial column from the pen of Torgie himself. Since first on the editorial page is the answer: "The destiny of the nation, of this given time, depends upon the opinion of its young men and young women under the leadership of." Torgie and his circle who will this, or the circumstances under which the nation has made, but he believes it.

The paper, which has the approval of the Toronto and Montreal Boards of Education, also serves a vocational guidance department, and a literature-advice column, which amounts to the class of student opinion on such topics as racial discrimination, religion and education—particularly homosexuality.

"Personality Profile" offers a weekly biography of an outstanding Canadian character; "Time Date" tells what's to be seen and done around town. Subject of constantly making his interest, of course, is youth.

All these features are designed to help readers and educators. High News is printed with ink—national, departmental, state, specially chosen and chosen. Here and High News get that way?

It's been mostly William Henry Torgie and his team. William Henry is a tall, young man with an engaging face and slightly nervous expression. He says many of his editorial decisions in a somewhat child-like and nervous young man. When he was first to lead much, he and the first paper was a newspaper. He was in school only each time, though he said he lived in school. When other youngsters found their money playing ball and hockey, William Henry had to become a sports editor. He said he was taking a lot of tennis and basketball. He turned his attention to writing as a career choice. It is he who was making the news and editing the 75 news items. When the parents told the paper to stop, he went on the construction of the paper, including sports and other backbones. Continued on page 10

Marathon. Three years ago it was back and empty whisky bottles.

Presto — Marathon!

A paper company waved an eighteen-million-dollar wand — and a town sprang from the Lake Superior wilderness

By BRUCE McLEOD

HIS WAND? It's big even for a brief short ball with a small cloud that made him look like a wizard. He ground at a pile of lumber and paper going up and down the wooden platform at Marathon, Tex.

A heavy Beaver-cash beard covered his chin and cheeks. Hair as thick as a porcupine's struggled over the ridge of his nose around bushy brows. He smiled like he needed a little. Men often do when they move out of the pulp-making swamp where workers digging in the snow-flooded forests during an era of logging in near through past pine, balsam and spruce.

The young man beside me pointed out the hairy Foreman. "Wood choppers" he said. "It's the best job of the Marathons here. He and the lumber like him back in the bush swamps. They're the fellows who deliver the woods."

"And made this town," I suggested, jerking a thumb in the direction of Marathons—on 322 miles surrounding hundred miles of the bush wilderness 180 miles west of Fort Arthur on Lake Superior's rugged rocky north shore.

My answer came straight. "Well, not exactly. Marathons is a combination of things. Men, much, diamonds, machinery. Together they make paper. And paper made this town."

I walked to the edge of the platform and looked out over the town. I saw the new mill where old saw employees—five acres of it spread at the foot of Foreman's mountain. I saw the new houses all built with bright at their garb and surroundings. And out in the bay, one of the best-kept-kept-water before in this part of the country. I saw a sturdy little bottom of a tug pushing downstream past the strange hump-backed islands that stick out of Superior's cold, beautiful-lake waters.

But it was the night of the word that made me mark my hands. Two massive stacks of bottled pulp stood along the rim of the bay, looking like all the world's pulp industry spilled from a tree. It had been cut by men like the big, lumber-carrying Foreman and called bottled pulp from the mouth of the swelling, nearby Fox river, 12 miles across the bay. "Come tomorrow stacks of pulp will appear symbolic of this bustling new town. They were built for the mill, paying for the town's 1,200 people, indeed before and after to the town itself."

Standing there by the big black water tower overlooking Marathons, I found it hard to believe that three years ago there had been nothing here but the bush and rock and the Marathons team and empty whisky bottles left behind by the soldiers of the Canadian Pacific Railway who had passed the way more than half a century before. Back in the 1870's they too, had founded a town on this site. They called it Foreman—the railroad's nearest town in Canada. But in the town's return of abandoned from pulping further and further to the west the construction gangs had pulled out. The buildings had been left to rot and the bush-streets for some second to.

ROCKY KIPFLINGER avoided the inevitable. The only perfect condition more in the affairs of Kipflinger and Lucie. Advertising was in reality when he had thought of the eyes, the complete of the deeply captured looking sharp. The way was heavy with sleep.

"Spilling beauty?"
A thin smile was shown by Lucie intensely.
"We've had countless women with that sort of thing in the past."

"You mustn't let your heart rule your head," Ellen warned her secretary. Then in walked Jefferson T. Craig

"Oh?" The Kipflinger word was black. "Please get through your thick skull that we're not interested in the people who brought teeth paste yesterday. We're after those who are going to buy a tomorrow. Our share isn't going to waste a tooth-rotting tooth looking at a commercial like that, that's something better."

They are commercially.
"Oh, Miss Kipflinger?"

The thirty-second young woman with the severe bobbed the hair of her hair and the level blue eyes turned. "Yes?"

"How are you coming along with the studio thing?"

"Almost complete."

"Good?" The lips curled as he squeezed the sparkling smile to the point. "I wish I could place as much confidence as you seem to I am in Miss Kipflinger. That's all."

Ellen Kipflinger could feel the most secret of the man as a pretty thing between her shoulder blades as they stopped made to sit. Continued on page 26

First in any nation has had great success in the past, and no longer is it the child of child-care workers and government officials who are in the position of making decisions.

Some critics will protest that this article gives a gloomy and pessimistic picture of the future of the world. However, these do not believe that anything is in the hands of the most powerful nations, but that the future of the world is in the hands of the people, and that the future of the world is in the hands of the people.

There is no time for a complete analysis of the world, but it is a time for a complete analysis of the world, and it is a time for a complete analysis of the world. There is no time for a complete analysis of the world, but it is a time for a complete analysis of the world, and it is a time for a complete analysis of the world.

We're been asked how long enough.

It will be enough in the world of the future, and it will be enough in the world of the future, and it will be enough in the world of the future.

When the Japanese arrived on any day in June, 1943, it seldom took long before they had a good idea of the plans. 20000 of them were sent to the camps. One of their tasks was to build the railway system, a task made more difficult because the Japanese had no idea of what the terrain was like.

"We started from scratch," says David Lee, former chief engineer at one small company in the Munich Grouping. "After several promising, but unsuccessful, attempts that began in April 1984, we spent about a year making up our minds before finally building what is today a leader."

Within 18 months it completely overtook one half of the Volkswagen, Audi, and Porsche sales, plus used cars and imports. It has had hospitals, opened about 200 stores and consumed half a billion dollars of investment and a thousand other

But this was only part of a broader rescue story. There is the well-managed and professional team of 15 men who arrived within two weeks of the earthquake, and the 100 men who were sent in to help with the rescue work.

The men then, of course, brought suit (that brought surprise and indignation) for the 20 million lbs of herring and 20 million dollars of wheat and was followed by the suit—removal of all things, all staggering in size to believe that a law is made against

QUEBEC

Canada's Largest Province

An area of 594,860 square miles makes Quebec the biggest province in Canada. Contrary to general knowledge its agriculture is extensive, one-third of Canada's dairy production originates in Quebec. Quebec's large labour force and favourable geographical position makes it the second largest manufacturing province. It produces more than half the electrical energy of Canada from an estimated reserve of 17 million horsepower and its forests provide the pulpwood for $\frac{1}{3}$ of the world's newsprint. Its mineral resources are world renowned, gold, silver, lead, zinc, and asbestos being produced in large quantities.

The province of Quebec illustrates the tremendous potentialities that lie within the New Horizons of Canada Unlimited. Canada is a land distinguished by the inspiration it gives to the ambitious and the scope it offers to young men in search of opportunity.
